Nineteen patients with thymoma and myasthenia gravis were reviewed long-term after thymectomy. Thymectomy was performed at the median age of 35 years and was curative in 18 cases. In the 16 patients with thymoma, the general status of the disease improved markedly. The incidence of proximal muscle weakness was reduced and the muscle power improved after thymectomy. The results of quantitative electromyography and muscle biopsy performed pre- and postoperatively in five patients suggested that the improvement of muscle weakness and clinical course after surgery was partly due to a reduction of the pathological changes of the muscle. Postoperative complications were rare and the recurrence rate of thymoma was low. The general condition of patients with thymoma and myasthenia gravis was ameliorated and remained good for many years. Thus, thymectomy is a reasonable treatment for myasthenia gravis in patients with thymoma.The invention relates to a method for manufacturing a composite workpiece from a plurality of flat components, each having a center line of symmetry. The method comprises manufacturing a first sub-workpiece from each of the components, placing the sub-workpieces onto a carrier in a predetermined spatial relationship
